BENSON GUARD AND BAXTER BLUES .- Some members of one or both of these companies treated our reporter of the procession yesterday in a man-ner that betokens not only a lack of decent civility but of common decency. The commanding offi-cers of the corps are doubtless ignorant of the qualifications of the men they put on guard. Another time we presume these upstarts will behave better; if not they may be expelled from their respective companies. A proper courtesy to the Press is one of the best features of our generally intelligent and gentlemanly soldiers; but there are exceptious to the best of rules. We do not desire to speak harshy of any company, and this is the first occasion for years when we have done so. The men concerned need not plead ignorance; they were well enough aware of the character and occupation of the man whom they took occasion to insult. Let them answer to their officers.

In our report of yesterday respecting the collection at the Synagogue for relief, it is erroneously printed that $1,000 were received. The whole collection amounts only to ONE HUNDRED Dollars, and the Committee for Relief have spent, during the present week, nearly $200. Any additional assistance will therefore be welcome.

THE KNOCKINGS ON GRIMES No. II-To the Editors of The Tribune: In his recent communications in The Tribunco Mr. J. Stanley Grimes has attempted to dispose of ter Knockings," as a wicked deception and swindle. Happening to know something of that strange affair myself, as the result of six weeks' close and patient investigation, I trust you will allow me space in your columns for the following remarks and statements:

space in your columns for the following remarks and statements:

According to Mr. Grimes's own showing, he did not approach the subject of his pretended investigation in the unbiased spirit of a true philosopher, seeking for the facts as they were, but with an irrevocable preimpression against the claims of the whole subject, regarding any proofs pro or con, which a strict investigation might unfold, as nearly superfluous. When he first heard of those mysterious operations, and before he had taken the slightest pains to inform himself of the facts in the case, he says: "I had no doubt whatever that the whole thing was a deception and resolved in my mind various schemes to detect the imposition."

When he visited the place in Western New York where the rapplogs were heard, he went, as the spirit of his whole account shows, not for the purpose of seeing what the thing really was, but for the purpose of seeing what the thing really was, but for the purpose of seeing the house where the manifestations were heard, he proceeded to pick out those who were and those who were not implicated in the deception, by their physiognomic and phrenological decelopments! (See his second article.)—And he confessess that he visited the Fox family at Barnum's Hotel, not to satisfy himself, "but at the request of others who believed he would be confounded." Since the juror has thus manifestly prejudged the cause, a candid public will, of sourse, judge whether he is qualified to give an unexceptionable verdict.

the request of others who believed he would be confounded." Since the juror has thus manifestly prejudged the cause, a candid public will, of course, judge whether he is qualified to give an unexceptionable verdict.

The writer of this happened to be at the room of the Hochesterians when Mr. Grimes had his interview, and will state a fact or two which Mr. G. has omitted, and which perfectly confirmed his declaration that he came "not to satisfy himself." When the sounds were made loadly and distinctly upon the table, not certainly more than two feet from where he sat, he refused to look under the table to see if any person or any machine was striking it, though invited by the ladies, and where they could not have touched it without being observed by every person in the room, Mr. Grimes scarcely bestowed the least attention upon the fact. He might have viewed from all sides and from all points everything except the floor, from which the sounds proceeded, and brought to light any secret wires or springs which could account for their production, but such a course did not suit his purpose. He knew that the whole thing was a humburg, and that was enough! On declaring that he knew precisely how the sounds were produced, he was requested to give the explanation before the company, so that it might be either proved or disproved; but with this certainly reasonable request he refused to comply, offering as his reason that he "did not wish to be discourteous!" Of course it is not discourteous to say "you are a cheat," but it is very discourteous to say "you are a cheat," but it is very discourteous to say "you are a cheat," but it is very discourteous to say "you are a cheat," but it is very discourteous to say "you are a cheat," but it is very discourteous to offer a reason for saying so.

I know not what attempts there may have been in other places to counterfeit such phenomena as have been exhibited at Barnam's Hotel for the last six weeks. The family out West, whom Mr. Grimes says he visited, may or may not have attem
